A Digital Shelf for Coach Kagiso

A plan for products that earn while you coach, sleep, and create — built once, sold forever, and designed to send more clients into your premium services, not fewer.

Prepared for: The Owner, Coach Kagiso

Prepared by: Your team

Why we are bringing this to you now

Right now, every rand the business earns requires your hands. A CV revamp takes your evening. A clarity session takes 75 minutes plus prep plus the follow-up call. The masterclass is capped at twelve seats because that is what one room with you in it can hold. This model works beautifully when bookings are full. But when bookings slow down — as they have — income stops completely, even though your knowledge, your materials, and your website are all still sitting there, ready to help people.

We are proposing a digital shelf: a small line of products that package what you already know into things people can buy at any hour, without a single minute of your time per sale. Templates, workbooks, recordings, guides, and one automated tool. Each one is built once and sells indefinitely.

Almost everything needed already exists. The website has a working checkout (Peach Payments), automated email delivery (Brevo), instant PDF generation, and even an AI CV analyzer already built into the site. We are not proposing a new build. We are proposing to put price tags on the shelf we already own.

“The services sell your hands. The products sell your knowledge. One of them runs out of hours. The other one doesn't.”

The concern, answered honestly

You raised a fair worry, and we want to face it directly rather than talk around it: “If we sell a R99 template, why would anyone pay me R400 for a revamp — or R1,200 for the VIP?”

1. The product buyer and the premium client are different people

The person who buys a R99 template was almost never going to pay R400. Right now, that person visits the site, sees the prices, and leaves with nothing — and we earn nothing. A digital shelf converts that lost visitor into a paying customer. We are not splitting the existing pie. We are finally charging the people who currently walk past it.

2. Do-it-yourself does not compete with done-for-you

Your premium clients are not paying for information. They are paying for you — your eye on their specific CV, your judgement on their specific career, your accountability over their 30 days. A template cannot do that, and the people who want that know it. Nobody cancels a personal chef because the supermarket sells recipe books.

3. Every product is a paid advertisement for the services

Each product carries a built-in upgrade path: “Want this done for you? Your purchase is credited toward the full service.” You already use this mechanic — the R150 CV Review credits toward the R400 Revamp. We are extending a proven part of your own model. A customer who has paid you R99 and got value trusts you. Upgrading a happy R99 customer is far easier than convincing a cold stranger to spend R1,200.

4. Lower-priced products make the premium look premium

Pricing psychology is consistent on this: a visible ladder (R49 → R149 → R400 → R1,200) makes the top of the ladder feel like the serious option, not an expensive one. With only services on offer, R400 is the cheap-or-nothing decision. With products underneath it, R400 becomes the obvious step up.

5. We protect the premium deliberately

One simple rule governs the whole shelf: no product ever includes your personal time or your personal review of someone's situation. That stays exclusive to the services. The moment a product would need your eyes on an individual client, it is a service — and priced like one.

The honest version of the risk: a small number of people who might have paid R400 will buy the R149 product instead. But for each of those, many more people who would have paid nothing will now pay something — and a portion of them climb the ladder into services they would never have bought cold. Across the career-coaching industry this trade reliably nets out positive, which is why nearly every established coach runs exactly this model.

The product line

Nine products in three waves. Wave one can be live within two weeks using material you already have. Every price sits below the R150–R400 service entry points on purpose: the shelf catches the price-sensitive majority and walks them upward.

Wave 1 — Quick wins (live within two weeks)

1. SA CV Template Pack

R99 – R199

Three to five ATS-friendly CV templates in Word and Google Docs format, drawn directly from the structures you already use on paid revamps — plus a short fill-in guide and two before-and-after examples. Positioned as “the exact bones I use when I rebuild a CV for R400.”

CV templates are the single most proven digital product in the career space worldwide. Yours carry an advantage international sellers cannot match: they are built for the South African job market, by a coach recruiters here actually respond to.

One-off effort to build: One weekend. The templates substantially exist inside your past revamp work.

How it protects and feeds the premium work: The pack closes with: “Want me to do it for you? CV Revamp R400, your template purchase credited.” It is the R150 Review mechanic, one rung lower.

2. Masterclass Replays

R150 – R250 per replay

You are already running “From Stuck to Strategic” on 4 July. We press record. The replay — video plus the take-home pack — goes on sale the following week for people who missed it or could not make a Saturday.

The live room stays premium and stays capped at twelve: the live price buys interaction, the intake form, and your attention. The replay buys the teaching only. After four or five sessions we will own a library we can also bundle (“The Career Reset Library” at around R600).

One-off effort to build: Zero additional hours. The work is already scheduled; we simply stop letting it evaporate when the Zoom call ends.

How it protects and feeds the premium work: Replay viewers watch you coach for two hours. That is the single best advertisement for a Clarity Session that could possibly exist, and it costs nothing to produce.

3. Interview Story Bank Workbook

R149

This is already on the website's downloads roadmap marked "on the list" — we are proposing it ships as a paid workbook rather than a freebie. Contents: STAR story-building templates, the 30 most common South African interview questions with answer frameworks, and a night-before preparation checklist.

Interview prep is the highest-urgency purchase in this market. People buy it in a mild panic, three days before the interview, at 22:00 — exactly when they cannot book a session with you and would otherwise get nothing.

One-off effort to build: Two to three evenings of writing. The questions and frameworks are in your head already.

How it protects and feeds the premium work: The workbook's upgrade page points to the 60-minute interview prep session inside the Glow Up VIP. Urgent buyers with budget skip straight to it.

4. Instant AI CV Score

R49 – R79

The website already contains a working AI CV analyzer in the dashboard. We turn it customer-facing: upload your CV, pay R49, receive an instant scored report with specific fixes. Completely automated — the only product on this list that involves literally zero human minutes per sale, forever.

It also catches the very bottom of the market: people for whom even R150 is a stretch today. They are real, they are numerous, and right now they leave empty-handed.

One-off effort to build: Technical wiring only, handled by us. None of your time — not at launch and not per sale.

How it protects and feeds the premium work: The report ends with: "This was the robot. Get the human version — 48-Hour CV Review R150, your R49 credited." The robot deliberately whets the appetite for your eye.

Wave 2 — Built over the following month

5. “Land the Interview” Mini-Course

R350 – R500

Your one-on-one system, recorded once: CV positioning, LinkedIn visibility, applying strategically, and interviewing — short videos plus the workbooks above. Sold as “the Glow Up VIP, do-it-yourself edition” at roughly a third of the VIP price.

This naming does double duty: it gives the R350 buyer a complete path, and it explicitly frames the R1,200 VIP as the version where you personally walk beside them. The VIP becomes more desirable, not less.

One-off effort to build: Two to three weekends of recording. No course platform needed at first: unlisted videos plus a buyer-only page on the existing site.

How it protects and feeds the premium work: Course students who stall mid-way are the warmest possible Clarity Session leads — they have already invested, already trust you, and already know exactly what working with you feels like.

6. 30-Day Job Search Bootcamp (email course)

R199

One email per day for thirty days, each with a single task. Week one: CV. Week two: LinkedIn. Week three: applications. Week four: interviews. Delivered automatically through Brevo, which the site already uses for every lead magnet.

For the buyer it feels like a daily coach in their inbox. For the business it is thirty consecutive days of contact with a paying customer — thirty natural moments to mention the services.

One-off effort to build: Write thirty short emails once. They then deliver themselves for years.

How it protects and feeds the premium work: Day 9: “If you want your CV professionally rebuilt instead, here's the Revamp.” Day 26: “Interview coming up? Here's the prep session.” The sequence sells softly for a month per customer.

7. SA Salary Negotiation Guide

R149

Scripts for “What is your current salary?”, counter-offer email templates, local benchmarking sources, and how to negotiate without souring the offer — written specifically for the South African market. Almost nobody serves this niche locally; international guides talk in dollars and American norms.

It also reaches a buyer the current services barely touch: the employed professional who is not job hunting but has an offer on the table this week.

One-off effort to build: Two to three evenings.

How it protects and feeds the premium work: Someone weighing a counter-offer is one short step from “I should think about my career properly” — which is the Clarity Session, by name.

Wave 3 — Bigger plays

8. Job Seeker Starter Pack (bundle)

R299 – R399

Templates + Interview Story Bank + an application tracker spreadsheet + the headline guide, bundled at a saving — the same logic as your existing CV + LinkedIn Bundle, applied to the shelf. Bundles reliably lift the average order value, and at R299–R399 it still sits below the R400 Revamp.

One-off effort to build: An afternoon — it is assembled from products already built in waves one and two.

How it protects and feeds the premium work: A R399 bundle buyer has demonstrated real budget. They are the most likely product customers to take the credit-toward-Revamp offer.

9. B2B Licensing

R5,000+ per agreement

Universities, SETAs, and corporate graduate programmes pay meaningful money for employability content: CV curricula, interview workshops, workbook licences. Once the shelf exists, it doubles as a portfolio we can pitch to institutions.

This is a slower burn — but a single licensing agreement can exceed a full month of individual bookings, and it is the most natural long-term direction for the brand.

One-off effort to build: One outreach email per week once waves one and two exist as proof.

How it protects and feeds the premium work: It does not touch the consumer ladder at all; it opens an entirely separate revenue lane on top of it.

What the numbers could look like

A deliberately modest scenario — roughly one to two sales per day across the whole shelf, which is a low bar for a site that already attracts job seekers and a coach who already posts content:

Product	Price	Sales / month	Revenue / month
Instant AI CV Score	R49	30	R1,470
SA CV Template Pack	R149	15	R2,235
Interview Story Bank	R149	8	R1,192
Masterclass Replay	R200	10	R2,000
30-Day Bootcamp	R199	5	R995
Salary Negotiation Guide	R149	5	R745
Shelf subtotal		73	R8,637
Upgrades created: 5 buyers take the CV Revamp	R400	5	R2,000
Monthly total			R10,637

Roughly R10,000 a month — over R120,000 a year — without a single booking required. And notice the last line before the total: in this scenario the shelf does not cannibalise the services, it creates R2,000 a month of service revenue from people who started with a R49–R399 purchase.

These are starting numbers. Unlike bookings, shelf revenue compounds: every new product, every new piece of content, and every replay added to the library raises the monthly floor without raising the monthly workload.

And what it costs

No new platforms, no subscriptions, no developers to hire. Checkout, payment processing, email delivery, and PDF generation are already live on the site — they currently serve the existing services and free lead magnets. The only investment is the one-off creation time listed under each product, most of which is evenings and weekends across about six weeks.

What this buys you

This is the part we most want you to sit with. The shelf is not just income — it is the thing that finally separates the business's earnings from your calendar.

- A floor under slow months. When bookings dip, the shelf keeps selling. The business stops swinging between feast and famine with your diary.
- Your time back for the work only you can do. Content, audience-building, partnerships, and the masterclasses — the activities that grow the brand — instead of trading every available hour for one-off deliverables.
- A content engine with a purpose. Every TikTok, LinkedIn post, and insight article currently points at services that need your hours to fulfil. Once the shelf exists, the same content sells products in your sleep. Content stops being a cost and becomes a salesforce.
- A more premium brand, not a cheaper one. Coaches with books, courses, and toolkits read as established authorities. The shelf raises the perceived value of sitting in a room with you.
- Proof for the bigger game. The product portfolio becomes the pitch deck for B2B licensing — the deals that could eventually dwarf both the shelf and the bookings.

“Each product is made once. After that, your job is the one you actually want: coaching the people who book you, and creating the content that fills the room.”

The plan, if you say yes

When	What ships
Weeks 1–2	CV Template Pack on sale. Record the 4 July masterclass for replay.
Weeks 3–4	Interview Story Bank Workbook on sale. Instant AI CV Score live.
Month 2	30-Day Bootcamp and Salary Negotiation Guide. Starter Pack bundle assembled.
Month 3	Mini-course recorded and launched. First B2B outreach with the shelf as portfolio.

Your involvement: the knowledge. Ours: everything else — the wiring, the checkout, the delivery, the pages. And nothing here is irreversible. If after three months the shelf genuinely pulls premium clients away rather than feeding them in, we take it down and we have lost a few weekends. If it works the way it works for nearly everyone else in this industry, the business gains a second income that never sleeps, never cancels, and never asks for your Saturday.

The ask: a yes to Wave 1 — the Template Pack and pressing record on 4 July. Two products, two weeks, almost no risk. Then we look at the sales numbers together and decide on the rest with real data instead of worry.
